

Libraries – For Readers Only

By

Libraries are not built only for reading. There are other things you can do in libraries. For example, you could ask a librarian to set up an art and crafts table so kids could have fun. Also, you can watch plays in some libraries, as they are very entertaining. There could be story time where a library staff reads to kids. That way it will be more interesting, not just reading and borrowing books. You also can chat, but chat quietly so you will not disturb other people.

There are also other things you can do so I suggest to have other activities, like the 'Show and Tell'. Get something special from your house you don't think other people have and share it with others, for example, unique stuffs such as antiques and collections, or photos of your adventures. I think they will enjoy and benefit from it. I would bring my family's stamp collection because it has Hong Kong, Chinese, and USA Stamps.

Another activity you can do is to play games like 'Guess Who'. Guess Who is a game where one people (or more) pretend to be someone popular (like Elvis Presley or Bill Gates) and give hints to the audience about who that person is famous for. Then, the audience tries to guess who he/she is. (Girls can pretend to be boys and boys can pretend to be girls if they want. It will be more fun and trickier.) It can take place in a loud room so it won't disturb other people.

So that is why libraries are not just for reading. There are other things the library can provide, so people can still learn, get knowledge and have fun at the same time. Libraries are so fun!
